From the LA Times, 8 Sep 19:

Andrew Fritz, Adrian Dahood-Fritz

Two weeks ago, Adrian Dahood-Fritz celebrated her 40th birthday with a marine-themed cake covered in white-chocolate sea stars. Her colleagues at the California Ocean Protection Council took her out for shaved ice cream at a place with "penguin" in its name, the bird she was known to love after years working in Antarctica.

Dahood-Fritz and her husband, Andrew Fritz, a photographer, had recently moved from Texas to Sacramento so Dahood-Fritz could join California's efforts to manage marine protected areas. She quickly developed a reputation as smart, unpretentious and passionate, said Mark Gold, the organization's executive director.

Dahood-Fritz previously worked for the National Science Foundation and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. In a statement, Gov. Gavin Newsom said Dahood-Fritz "embodied marine conservation" and led the state's efforts to manage California's network of marine protected areas.

Josh Baker, a longtime friend of Fritz's, said the couple had a "meter" impact on Austin's photography community, a race-car community in Houston and an international diving community. His two young sons knew Fritz as "Uncle Andrew," he said.

"There was no escaping their impact," he said. "If they were in your lives, they were in your lives."

The two friends had started a photography business together four years ago. Fritz, 40, would shoot portraits, weddings and nature — his passion. He often put his computer science degree to use, managing their website, and once built a photography time-lapse application.

"He was a doer and a hands-on constructor," Baker said.
