Sunil Singh Sandhu

After 24 years in the United States, Sunil Singh Sandhu still called his family in Singapore every week, and visited his father and two sisters at least once a year. When Sandhu visited his family, he loved to eat barbecued stingray at one of Singapore's ubiquitous open-air food centers.

"I never had to worry about my son," his father, Soji Singh, told the New Paper in Singapore. "He was a nice boy who had no bad habits. The only thing that I worried about was him not being married."

Sandhu, 46, earned master's and doctoral degrees from Stanford University and worked as a scientist at a Palo Alto research company. He was a newcomer to scuba diving, picking up the sport two months before his death.

"I didn't know that he was going for another trip," Singh said. "I had been trying to persuade him to come back to Singapore."
